J.P. Franzen Associates Architects

The team at J.P. Franzen Associates Architects faced a few challenges before breaking ground on this Colonial Revival home, which shares its site with a new carriage house and barn. The clients wanted to create a compound for their active family. An existing barn on the property was beyond saving, but the new structure had to be exactly the same volume due to zoning laws. Much of the work on the main house—including in the kitchen with its custom cabinetry and the living room with stately doors to the outside—focused on maximizing the views of Long Island Sound. With its old beams and reclaimed wood, the new barn maintains a sense of historical context and offers the family two levels of state-of-the-art space. —NT
